Use this form to remove the reversionary nomination on your pension account.

When can a reversionary nomination be revoked?

A reversionary nomination can only be revoked if the nominee is no longer eligible to receive a pension in the event of your death, for example, because the nominee has died or because the nominee is no longer a dependant under superannuation law. For Term Allocated Pension accounts where the term of the pension was based on a term only available to the reversionary beneficiary, the reversionary nomination can only be revoked where the reversionary beneficiary has passed away.

A dependant under superannuation law means:

- your spouse*
- a child of yours
- someone with whom you have an interdependency relationship (generally someone with whom you live and have a close personal relationship and where one or each of you provides the other with domestic support and personal care)
- someone who is otherwise dependant on you, for example, someone who depends on you for substantial financial support or maintenance#.

Important: Please consult your adviser or appropriately qualified professional if you are unsure if the existing nominee on your account is still a dependant under superannuation law.
